Contents to be written in each chapter:

1. Introduction:

Provide background information about your topic, explain why it is important or relevant, and clearly state the problem or objective your work addresses. Introduce the scope of your study, any challenges involved, and briefly outline what the rest of the document will cover. This section sets the stage for your project.

2. System Requirements: Summarize previous research, theories, and findings related to your topic, highlighting what has already been done and where gaps or limitations exist. Functional (focus on the functions that your system does) and Non-functional requirements (like response time, usability, scalability, reliability etc.), Hardware and software specifications.

3. System Design: Describe the architecture, approach, tools, techniques, datasets, or processes you plan to use to address the problem or conduct your research, explaining why they are suitable.

4. Implementation: Explain the implementation using Pseudocode

5. Results: Present and analyze the outcomes of the experiments or tests, using tables, graphs, or figures if needed. Each figure must be numbered as ChapterNo.FigureNo and given a caption.

6. Conclusion and Future Work: Summarize the key findings of your work, reflect on its significance or limitations, and suggest possible improvements or directions for future research.

References : Ensure references are cited in the text.

Eg: In computer science, a data structure is a way to organize and store data that is usually chosen for efficient access to data [1].
